Exploring “trauma-informed”

What does it mean for an organisation to be “trauma-informed” in Scotland?

With Patrick Tomlinson & Judy Furnivall

Trauma-Informed

Date: 12th May 2022, 10:00 - 13:00
Venue: Moore House Training Academy, Livingston, or Online
Cost: £59 in person, £49 virtually

Join us in person, or virtually, for a morning with Patrick Tomlinson (Author and Trauma Specialist) and Judy Furnivall (Chair of Scottish Attachment in Action) for an in depth discussion around trauma-informed practice.

The Promise Plan 21-24 states that the way Scotland cares for children and young people “must be underpinned by the guiding principle of attachment and must be informed, responsive and reflective about the nature and impact of trauma. Every care setting must facilitate a relationship-based approach, the workforce must be trained and supported to attune to children’s physical and emotional states. This practice of ‘tuning in’ to how children are feeling, enables a process of coregulation and stability where children can learn to manage stress and anxiety. The workforce must be supported to be present and emotionally available to the children in their care.”

What does it take to be a genuinely trauma-informed organisation? Is training enough? What are the implications for service providers, and their regulators, in evidencing that they are truly trauma-informed? What does Scotland need to do to take forward this commitment as part of keeping The Promise to children and young people?

Join us for an audience with Patrick and Judy as they explore trauma-informed practice, followed by the opportunity to participate in workshops designed to inform Scotland’s next steps in the journey. You will be able to attend both Workshops A and B.

Workshop A. Patrick Tomlinson
How do service providers create and maintain a trauma-informed culture?

Workshop B. Judy Furnivall
How do we measure a service provider’s trauma-informed culture?

Spaces are limited for attending in person, and will be allocated on a first come, first served basis. However there is also the opportunity to join us virtually.
